		Subtitle: Intro to Literary Theory
		NOTE: What are the tools of the literary critic? How do we go about interpreting literature and culture? Where do the perspectives we use to analyze literature and culture come from? What is their intellectual history? If you would like answers to these questions, you are in the right place. This course is an introduction to the most influential patterns of thought in recent and contemporary critical theory. It surveys the theories and methods that we use in literary and cultural analysis, tracing their development from New Criticism to Structuralism, Deconstruction, Psychoanalysis, Feminism, Queer Studies, Marxism, Historicism and Cultural Studies, Postcolonial and Race Studies, Reader Response, and ending with more recent developments such as Ecocriticism and Disability Studies. Our course goals: become familiar with the intellectual trajectories in

We will use the Western Wind text to hone our poetic skills and to engage in critical discussions about the varying techniques employed in poetry. We will also engage three exceptional monograph books of contemporary poetry by Julia Bouwsma, Forrest Gander and Alexandra Teague. We will pay special attention to how to talk about poems and how poetic effects are achieved. Students will produce a final chapbook that will be titled and ordered with intention.	4	LEC	T	07:00PM	-09:45PM	FH 149	NIEVES

*2322	ENGL 498-001	TOPICS IN PROSE NOTE: The topic is : Monsters, Inc This is an advanced creative writing course dedicated to studying and writing about monsters, grotesques and all manner of fantastical entities both real and imagined. We will examine the interdisciplinary nature of monsters at the nexus of the humanities and sciences, exploring how monsters exist at the intersections of biology, psychology, anthropology, folklore, cybernetics, zoology and poetics. Students are welcome to bring to workshop writing projects unrelated to the course theme; however, some experimentation with the class topic will be required. While some of the class will be devoted to iconic monstrous incarnations like vampires, zombies, aliens and serial killers, we will primarily focus on less common and diverse grotesqueries, tracing the transhistorical perception of monsters from mythical creatures	4	LEC	MW	12:30PM	-01:45PM	FH 149	HABERMEYER

Subtitle: Race and Conflict

NOTE: This course will introduce students to some of the major patterns in world history since 1500 CE. What makes this particular class experience unique is that we will be exploring the development of our modern world through modern concepts of race and different forms of human "identity," all while trying to understand how these ideas have been influenced by the growth of imperialism. The course is not designed to cover the history of the entire world since 1500.

		NOTE: This course will cover the history of the former imperial city, today known as Istanbul, from its earliest historical settlement until the present. During its long tenure as imperial city, under two imperial configurations, Constantinople Istanbul had immense global implications, which will be explored. The course will be chronologically structured and thematically unified. The first half of the course, covering the Roman & Byzantine periods (195-1453) will be taught by Kevin Birch. The second half of the course, covering the Ottoman & modern Turkish periods (1453-present) will be taught by Emin Lelic. Some common themes that will be addressed in all four periods include architecture, sacred space, public munificence, imperial city, science & knowledge, religion, elites, preservation appropriation of previous cultural religious sites, health and

		NOTE: George Washington's World This course uses the life of George Washington (1732-1799) as a window into colonial America and the birth of the United States. Washington lived through one of the most transformative periods in American history. His experiences reveal much about the many peoples, places, and ideas that made up early America and the forces that brought about change. Rather than engaging narrowly with Washington's biography, therefore, students in this course will be invited to explore a wide range of topics inspired by his life, through class readings and personal research, such as: the tobacco economy and slavery, colonial government and politics, religion and freemasonry, diplomatic relations with Native Americans, mercantilist economy and the first consumer revolution, marriage and gender, land surveying and frontier expansionism, the French and

Popular narratives and many scholarly works paint this broad movement as inherently violent, exclusionary, and comprised of groups dedicated to the overthrow of American society (among other things). This course will examine the movement in the context of its cultural composition, major goals, its roots in previous black organizing strategies, and the different strands of thought that emerged as the movement developed during the mid and late 20th century. Ranging from the aftermath of World War II to contemporary issues of race and power within American society, we will also explore the international dimensions of the Black Power movement, particularly by examining how decolonization across Africa, Asia, and	3	SEM	T	05:30PM	-08:15PM	PH 371	VENOSA

 NOTE: This team-taught one-credit course will consist of a series of lectures and discussions led by SU Faculty members from a variety of disciplines along with guest speakers and community members. The course is designed to facilitate your exploration of the relevant, complex, and at time volatile topic of food and sustainability in the twenty-first century. Areas of focus include food waste, food and culture, inequality in the production, distribution, and consumption of food, the impact of local food systems on social and environmental sustainability, and much more. You will also become informed about opportunities in the local community to put what you learn into action. This course has no prerequisites, and can only be taken pass fail. It will meet Monday evenings from 7:00-8:30, and in addition to student attendees, class lectures will

	Subtitle: Technology and Innovation Stra
	NOTE: Technology is a key driver of understanding dynamics of industry. It affects business environments at all levels from marketing to supply chain management. The primary objective of this course is to help students understand various topics in technology strategies and the impacts of them on organization changes. Accordingly, the course goals are three folds: 1) to understand how innovations emerge and gain adoption in the marketplace; 2) to understand how innovations impact the industry environments; and 3) to gain insights into how firms can transform themselves into effective innovations, and also why firms can be obsoleted when they ignore the innovative changes in the market. The course is particularly applicable for students interested in technology-based companies.
