	Subtitle: Forensics NOTE: Meets General Education IVB. Forensics is where the fields of science and law meet, often to solve crimes. This course will introduce the study of forensics with an emphasis placed on crime scene processing as well as the evidence that is recovered during these investigations. While the course will focus on the science used in solving crimes, students should note that potentially sensitive matters such as violent crimes and death investigations will be discussed.
*6418	BIOL 105-601	BIOLOGY AND SOCIETY	3	LEC	F	11:00AM	-01:50PM	HS	243	MIRIEL
	NOTE: The goal of this hybrid course is to provide students with the foundation for success in more advanced anatomy and physiology courses. This course explores the structure and function of the human body at the cellular, tissue, organ, and system level. It will also focus on homeostatic mechanisms involved in maintaining human health, and how alterations in homeostatic mechanisms contribute to disease.

NOTE: Course Description In this course we will read, discuss, and analyze poetry. The core texts of the class are contemporary monograph collections of poems and we will learn how to read individual poems, series of poems and the book as a complete project. This will allow us to think of poems in conversation with each other and the transitions between poems. We will also be reading a selection of both canon and contemporary poems by other authors to explore the historical and modal range of the poem. We will read books by Patricia Smith, Gabrielle Calvocoressi, and Kevin Prufer.

Addressing questions of cultural identity, national identity, inclusion, alienation, social interaction, adaptation, and assimilation (or resistance to it), we will seek answers to the following questions: What are the promises of a multicultural society in the US? How do the experiences of people of color clash with a multicultural ethos? How does literature help us imagine a multiculturalism that might fulfill its promise? What is the relationship between multiculturalism and the American Dream? In our class discussions we will practice close

We will work this semester reading in each of the genres and using those readings as the basis for class discussions about craft choices and the decisions that a writer might make during a creative process and as a basis for writing experiments and exercises. You will produce a creative piece in each of the genres that will be workshopped in class. We will read authors that include but are not limited to: Bob Hicok, Leslie Jamison, Ander Monson, Karen Russell, Tobias Wolff, Ken Liu, Jhumpa Lahiri.

		NOTE: ENGL 382 is a fascinating survey of trailblazing African American writers' thoughts on American racial and national identity. ENGL 382 is designed to cultivate any student's comfort and familiarity with African-American writers from the colonial period to roughly 1919, so it focuses on immersing students in their texts and the historical contexts through the study of African-American music and two required field trips to historic sites and museums. In the past, we have visited Pemberton Hall, traveled the Harriet Tubman Freedom Trail, and toured the Smithsonian National Museum of African American History and Culture. The requirements are quite manageable: quizzes, two short essays, and a little research - an annotated bibliography.

*4836	ENVH 110-010	INTRO TO ENVIRONMENTAL SCI NOTE: Introduction to the interactions of living organisms and the environment, with an emphasis on human interactions. Environmental science principles, consequences of environmental pollution and resource depletion that lead to environmental degradation are presented. Global environmental challenges, such as global stratospheric ozone depletion and biodiversity loss are examined, along with air and water pollution and population issues. May not be used to satisfy requirements for the environmental health science major. Meets General Education IVB (Prior to Fall 2008: IIIB).	3	LEC	MW	04:00PM	-05:15PM	HS 337	GUNTHER

NOTE: This course surveys selective topics in world history during the twentieth century. It focuses on political, economic, social, cultural, and military trends as well as representative events and people that are particularly important to today's world. The course covers much, but by no means all, of the globe. Special topics include the two world wars; Nazism and the Holocaust; the Cold War; decolonization; revolutionary change in Russia, China, and Iran; and the emergence of the Global South, especially the Middle East, India, and China.

NOTE: Introduction to Comparative Religion will explore the basic beliefs and practices of the major religious traditions of the Western and the Eastern world - four eastern traditions - Hinduism, Buddhism, Confucianism, Taoism and the three Abrahamic traditions - Judaism, Christianity, and Islam. Additionally, the less known world religions and some other religious trends will be analyzed.
*5721	HIST 103-004	FIRST YEAR SEM WORLD HIST	4	SEM	MWF	12:00PM	-12:50PM	PH	371	VENOSA
Subtitle: Race and Conflict
NOTE: This course will introduce students to the various ways that major events throughout the 20th century - including social movements, armed conflicts, ideological upheavals, and other events- were impacted to a large extent by ideas of "race," racially-based power systems, and by governments quantifying different groups of people by a particular "identity." This class is not designed to examine the entire history of the 20th century, but it will use the 20th century as way of examining how our modern world has been largely shaped by issues of race and identity, especially in the various ways that large states or empires have operated. This is a class designed to both introduce you to key events in our modern world and to challenge you to reconsider everything you know -or think you know- about race, personal identity, and key moments of the 20th century.

		NOTE: Immortalized in modern film and books, the Crusades were a central phenomenon of the Middle Ages. This course examines the origins and development of the Crusades, the Crusader States in the Middle East and the Islamic reaction. It explores dramatic events, such as the great Siege of Jerusalem, and introduces vivid personalities, including Richard the Lionheart and Saladin. We will consider aspects of institutional, economic, social and cultural history and compare medieval Christian (Western and Byzantine), Muslim and Jewish perceptions of the crusading movement. Finally, we will critically examine the resonance the movement continues to have in current ideological debates.
*6135	HIST 215-002	TOPICS IN HISTORY Subtitle: Medieval Spain	4	LEC	TR	11:00AM -12:15PM	TE	179	VICENS SAIZ
		NOTE: This courses traces the history of the Iberian Peninsula from the post-Roman period, through the Middle Ages, and into the early modern period. This course explores the rich, but volatile, relations between Christians, Jews, and Muslims in this period while placing the history of the Iberian Peninsula in the wider European, Mediterranean, and Atlantic context.
*6136	HIST 215-003	TOPICS IN HISTORY Subtitle: Islam in Africa	4	LEC	TR	02:00PM -03:15PM	PH	371	VENOSA
		NOTE: Since the very beginnings of Islam, African societies have played a major role in the religion's development and basic traditions. This course examines the diverse and often complex relations between African Muslims and broader Islamic traditions over the last 1300 years, beginning with an exploration of the roots of Islam and a discussion of the ways that Islamic practices became "Africanized." In particular, we will examine the connections between religion, politics, culture and society, and how Muslim peoples across Africa have demonstrated agency in a variety of historical contexts. At its heart, this course is designed to approach Islam as a broad conceptual lens by which we can analyze various aspects of African history and culture, including those regions and cultures beyond "Islamic Africa."
