HISTORY DEPARTMENT POLICY:

Four Research Paper Requirement

Adopted March 10, 2005

The history major requires that you complete seven courses at the 300-400 level, including History 330: Proseminar. As part of your work for those courses you must complete at least four research papers of at least twelve pages, each on a different topic. Your professors, who will determine whether they are acceptable for registration using the criteria listed in the attached rubric, register the papers in the department office (Holloway Hall 338).

By requiring these papers we ensure that everyone who graduates with an SU history major has substantial experience in developing the following skills:

- Research: seeking out relevant information from a wide variety of sources;
- Analysis: weighing evidence and crafting an argument, examining existing interpretations and developing original insights;
- Communication: writing clearly and effectively, citing documents and existing works on the subject properly.

It is your responsibility to ensure that you take history courses in which you will either be required, or have the opportunity, to write a research paper, starting with the Proseminar, which provides necessary and valuable training. You should take it either in the fall of your sophomore year or, at the latest, in the spring of your junior year. During program planning the department will provide a list of courses in which writing a research paper is at least an option.

If a professor finds that your paper does not meet the standards for registration, s/he may give you a grade of “incomplete” for the course to ensure that you make the necessary corrections by the middle of the following semester.

You may not write a paper outside of a course to be registered with the History Department, and you may not write a paper for a course after that course has been completed. Papers written outside the department are not acceptable, the only exceptions being the honors thesis, as long as a history faculty member serves as a reader, or a research paper written in anthropology.

To ensure that you graduate on schedule, please:

- Do not put off writing your papers (registering one paper per semester is ideal);
- Choose courses for which the research paper is at least an option;
- Consult with your professor early in the semester about a paper topic and a schedule for completion.
- Consult with your adviser every semester during program planning;
- Check with the department office that your papers have been registered.

By ensuring program quality, we add to the value of your SU academic experience and your SU degree. In fairness to the vast majority of students who complete this requirement, we do not clear students for graduation until the requirement is completed.
