

The Directors

Dr. Keith Brower, professor and chair of SU's Department of Modern Languages and Intercultural Studies, is director of the SU Summer Program in Spain. He developed and inaugurated the program in consultation with colleagues at the Universidad de Málaga in 2001 and served as on-site director 2001-04. Dr. Louise Detwiler, assistant professor of Spanish at SU, is the program's assistant director and served as on-site director in 2005. She also has directed study abroad programs in Mexico. Both Dr. Brower and Dr. Detwiler are familiar not only with the city and region but also with the Universidad de Málaga faculty and administration and numerous other Málaga residents—business people, artists and writers, tour guides, etc.—whose contributions help ensure the quality of the students' experience. Drs. Brower and Detwiler review applications, make flight arrangements, hold orientation meetings prior to departure and work with the Universidad de Málaga administration regarding the placement of students with host families and selection of faculty/tutors. Once in Spain, the on-site director for 2007 will oversee and participate in the instruction of the courses taught in Málaga, hold cultural orientation meetings during the course of the program, advise students regarding local topics, accompany students on the program-organized excursions and in general serve as a "cultural broker" throughout the program.

2007 Summer Program in

Spain

The 2007 SU Summer Program in Spain will run for five weeks from May 28 through July 2 and will be based in Málaga, Spain, a beautiful and historic beach-lined city of 600,000 on the country's famous Costa del Sol.

Classes

Classes, which consist only of SU program students, are conducted by Universidad de Málaga faculty and the Program Director from SU's Modern Languages Department at the Universidad de Málaga's Cursos para Extranjeros Center in downtown Málaga. Regular classes meet each morning with a one-hour class on Spanish grammar review and composition, followed by another one-hour class on Spanish culture, history and art (the topic and instructor of this class changes every several days during the Program). In addition to the regular morning classes, students meet one or two times a week in small groups with a Spanish tutor, who takes the students on cultural immersion experiences in Málaga. Students also meet with the program director once a week for cross-cultural observations and discussion.

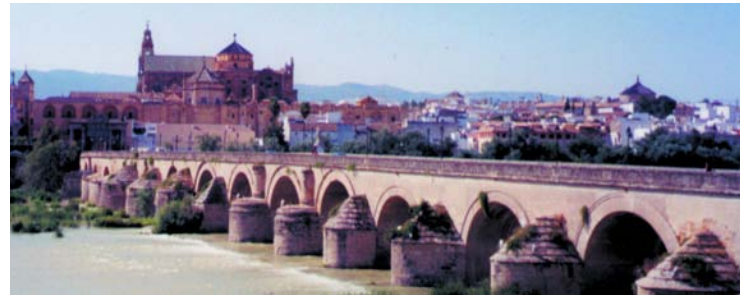

Academic Credit

Students in the program earn four credits from SU, with the credits awarded via Spanish 309: Summer Program in Spain, which counts toward the SU Spanish major and minor.

Students who have completed the equivalent of SU's Spanish 202: Spanish in Review by the beginning of the program are eligible to apply.

Excursions

The program features a one-day excursion to Granada and a three-day trip to Córdoba and Sevilla. The program's art history professor accompanies students on these trips, serving as guide and actually holding class in the likes of Granada's Alhambra, Córdoba's Mezquita, and Sevilla's Catedral and Reales Alcázares, as well as other sites of interest, all of which the students see in slide presentations in class in Málaga prior to seeing them come to life on the excursions. Program participants also visit sites in Málaga, such as the Catedral and Alcazaba, again in the company of the program's art history professor. Students also have ample free time to explore Málaga and its surroundings—the caves of Nerja, the beaches of Torremolinos and Marbella, the mountain town of Mijas, the old plaza de toros of Ronda, even the Rock of Gibraltar—on their own.

Housing

Students live and take meals in selected Spanish homes, most of which are situated within a 10-minute walk of the Mediterranean.

Cost

Tuition and fees for the 2007 SU Summer Program in Spain are between $4,300 and $4,800 for in-state (Maryland) students, the final price depends on the number of participants, as well as the exchange rate and prices of services in Spain in spring 2007; the final price will be set in March 2007 and will fall within the range cited above. (Out-of-state students should factor in an additional $1,384 in out-of-state tuition.) The program price includes all tuition, round-trip airfare (most likely from JFK in New York), bus passes in Málaga, room and board in a Spanish home throughout the program, and program-organized excursions (including meals, hotel, transportation). Participants also purchase an ISIC identification card ($23 in 2006) and two books required for the program course (totaling about $25). Scholarships are available from the SU Summer Program in Spain and SU's Center for International Education, as well as from sources outside the university.
