Johann Ernst Galliard (1687-1749) was a German composer and oboist in the early 18th century. Galliard's works played a significant role in London's musical life. Galliard is thought to be one of the leading composers of English theatre music in the 1730s. Along with his many contributions to the writing of opera music, Galliard composed sonatas for oboe, bassoon and cello.

George Frideric Handel (1685-1749) was an English Baroque composer. He is famous for his operas, oratorios and concerti grossi. These Sonatas were published in 1732, in the latter of the Baroque Era, written for solo violin and piano.

Fritz Kreisler (1875-1962) was an Austrian-born violinist and composer. He was considered one of the most famous violinists of his time. The Sicilienne and Rigaudon were published in 1910 and have been falsely attributed to François Francœur simply because it was written in his style. This piece was from the end of the Romantic Period (1815-1910) and overlapped into the early 20th century (1900-2000).

William Grant Still (1895-1978) began composing large-scale works in the early 1920s. Still is noted as the first African American to conduct and compose a piece for a major symphony orchestra. He also was one of the first to write for radio, films and television.

Baroque Era (1600-1750) Pre-classical era in which music expanded in size, range and complexity of instrumental performance. Baroque’s musical focus was to provoke feelings such as love, hate, anger and joy.
