Administrative History: The Teaching American History program was designed to raise student achievement by improving teachers' knowledge and understanding of, and appreciation for traditional U.S. history. The program utilized resources located at the Edward H. Nabb Research Center for Delmarva History and Culture to further expand the understanding of the participants. Using the new skills they learned through the program the teachers were able to create new lesson plans to present to their students. This program was a collaborative effort between the Wicomico Board of Education, Salisbury University History Department, and the Edward H. Nabb Research Center for Delmarva History and Culture.

Scope and Content Note: The Teaching American History program records document the creation and implementation of teaching methods using original local source records for Wicomico County teachers. The materials date from 2004-2006, with the bulk of the material dating to 2004. These records include compact discs containing lesson plans on American history created by the participants of the program. The records also contain audio cassettes and compact discs of oral history interviews. These interviews focus on a variety of topics relating to the Eastern Shore, including segregation and integration, education and World War II.
