Are you fascinated (and sometimes puzzled) by why people make the decisions they do? Do you listen well and provide good advice to others to help them resolve their conflicts? Sometimes everyone needs a little help making sense of their lives and knowing how to move forward. Our communities also need people who care about the public good and want to help strengthen the structures and supports that make life better for those who live there.

Salisbury University offers a wide range of programs for students who are “people-focused.” Students can focus on research, clinical application, brain sciences, cultural engagement, conflict mediation and many other areas, all with close interaction with faculty mentors to guide them.

Student in these programs typically pursue careers in counseling, non-profit organizations, research, education, health care, the legal system, human resources or government agencies.

In a recent survey, SU graduates were hired for jobs or internships by organizations like the Worcester County Health Department, the Kennedy Krieger Institute, Peninsula Regional Medical Center, Under Armor and numerous school districts.

Other students continued on to graduate school at places like Johns Hopkins University, the University of New Mexico, the University of Akron and Ball State University.

If you want to better understand people and make a difference in their lives, explore SU’s majors!

Undergraduate Programs:
- Community Health
- Conflict Analysis Dispute Resolution
- Conflict Analysis Dispute Resolution MINOR
- Gerontology MINOR
- Management - Human Resource Management
- Philosophy
- Philosophy MINOR
- Psychology
- Psychology MINOR
- Social Justice Studies MINOR
- Social Work
- Sociology
- Sociology MINOR

Graduate Programs:
- Master of Arts in Conflict Analysis and Dispute Resolution
- Master of Social Work

Co-curricular Opportunities:
- Social Justice Living - Learning Community (for freshmen)