

Creative Writing Program

English Department • Fulton School of Liberal Arts

PROGRAMS

- English, B.A. Creative Writing Concentration
- Creative Writing Minor

About the Program

The Creative Writing Program at Salisbury University is built on diversity. With a workshop-based curriculum where students share their writing, the concentration offers an opportunity to grow with a cohort of peer authors who know each other's work intimately. Students expand their horizons as they engage in a varied curriculum with a supportive community. No matter what their interest, students can enjoy a well-balanced program with areas including contemporary fiction, nonfiction and poetry taught by writers who represent a wide range of formal styles, genres and world views.

Beyond the Classroom

With many resources and facilities to foster growth in the arts, students of the Creative Writing Program become part of a creative community that extends beyond the classroom. Our students have opportunities to meet published creative writers and well-known critics through SU's Writers on the Shore public reading series. Students can gain editorial and publishing experience through work on the University's Scarab literary magazine.

Faculty Mentors

One of the greatest strengths of the Creative Writing Program at SU is its faculty, who are active scholars in their fields and publish scholarly books, articles, essays, anthologies, and poetry and fiction collections. They present their work at academic conferences and give readings across the country. Small class sizes at SU allow students to have one-on-one interaction with these well-published faculty members, who offer hands-on critical evaluation and help students explore regional, national and international opportunities.
