

Education Minor Seidel School of Education

A child's world is shaped by every adult who guides them, both inside the classroom and beyond. Salisbury University's education minor helps you understand how children grow, learn, and make sense of the world, so you can support them in any setting. From understanding the role of play and creativity to learning how families, communities, and caregivers shape development, this minor helps you build the knowledge to make a meaningful difference in children's lives – wherever your career takes you.

Career Paths

if you have always wanted to work with children and want to explore more, this minor is for you! The options are countless - whether you want to work with kids in health care, social work, exercise science, nonprofits, community programs, therapy, outdoor education, or beyond, this minor will prepare you to build relationships with children, interact with children and their families, and learn how to apply your knowledge and skills in child development and learning to your major!

Why Choose the Education Minor?

Here, you'll have countless opportunities to reach children wherever they are. Get involved with SU students who share your passion for working with kids through clinical experiences and after-school programs and activities!

BEYOND THE CLASSROOM

At SU, your path can go far beyond the classroom. SU students and alumni work as children's museum project coordinators, family services workers, disabilities specialists, youth sports coaches, and more. They also launch community programs – from before-school jump rope clubs to outdoor camping nights – and contribute to nationwide initiatives like “Let's Move” and “Just for Girls” after-school programs.
