

Great leaders help people grow. Leaders have a vision and motivate others to make it a reality.

Whether managing a business team or enacting social change, the importance of leadership skills in our everyday lives is growing.

More and more, employers seek good leaders when making hiring decisions, and there is no better place to start taking charge of your future than in your university years.

Why Choose a Leadership Studies Minor?

SU's leadership studies minor is designed to prepare students to lead positive action-oriented social change in organizations and society, no matter what their interests. Open to all majors and disciplines, the minor allows students to actively apply leadership principles, ethics, skills, organizational and community dynamics, and civic engagement. Civic engagement is a pillar of an SU education. With campus organizations such as the Institute for Public Affairs and Civic Engagement (PACE) and endless opportunities for community outreach, SU is the perfect campus to develop leadership experiences.

The minor is an interdisciplinary liberal arts program founded on historical and contemporary principles of humanities, education, business, social science and public policy. This innovative and integrative curriculum educates and prepares leaders to navigate and shape complex and diverse spheres of influence in personal, professional and public life.

Leadership Studies Curriculum

The leadership studies curriculum is designed so that all courses are multicultural, multigenerational and multidimensional – so no matter who you are or what your background, you will be prepared to shape diverse influences in your personal, professional and public life. Founded on principles of humanities, education, business, social science and public policy, students in this program go into their first job ready to lead.

The Minor Consists of:

- Two core courses that cover leadership ethics, skills and behaviors
- A selection of academic courses that cover two domains:
 - Leadership skills and development
 - Organizational and cultural dynamics
- A capstone experience that contains practical application of leadership skills, organizational and cultural dynamics and civic engagement
